The Chairman said the gentleman could not ask that privilege of the House, when the House was in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Eldridge expressed the hope that the gentleman from Massachusetts get the opportunity he asked. It was a matter which his (Eldridge's) side of the House would like to haye ventilated.

The Chairman said that the Committee would have to rise for that purpose, as the Committee was acting under a direct order of the House, closing debate.

The Committee rose, having first agreed to Mr. Bingham's amendment, offered when the House went first into Committee to-day.

Mr. Butler then asked unanimous consent to speak for ten minutes.

Mr. Eldridge expressed the hope that House would not "bottle up the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Laughter.] Unanimous consent having been given, Mr. Butler expressed his ininite obligations to the House, for its kindness, and said: I have never concealed the fact which is now so offensively put forward that I voted for Jefferson Davis in the Convention of my party fifty-seven times. I thought him the representative man of the South, and hoped thereby to save the threatened disunion which appeared in the distance. I was foiled, and disunion came. The difference between me and the honorable gentleman from Ohio is this, that while Jefferson Davis was a Senator of the Union, I supported him, while-the gentleman, Mr. Bingham, supports him while he is a traitor. I have changed my support, [Laughter.] I saw the error of my ways and repented. But I did not expect a blow to be a limed at me in that direction from the side of the House which supported him ten, has supported him ever since, and is still supported him ever since, and is still supported him then, has supported him they have a support him and his friends.
